ASK GREAT QUESTIONS

WORKBOOK

Stop trying to be interesting.

BE INTERESTED.

For years, we have been training our students that it is way more important to BE INTERESTED than it is to be interesting.

Kids are so focused on creating their own personal brand via social media. They are competing for attention and measuring their value with "likes" and "friends" that they may have never even met. The pressure is on them to be interesting. That pressure is overwhelming.

Psychology has shown that there is a better way to build relationships. You don't need to be INTERESTING. Instead, focus your energy on others. Show them that they are valued by being INTERESTED. People love spending time with people who make them feel important. So if you want real relationships, demonstrate interest in others.

The top way to do this is to practice the skill of ASKING QUESTIONS. Instead of talking about yourself, ask questions that enable you to learn about someone else. This one skill will redefine your relationships and make you a more desirable friend, leader, teammate, spouse, parent, teacher...person.

Spend some time crafting GREAT QUESTIONS that will challenge others to think. Great questions will stimulate great conversations and help you to deepen your relationships through shared experience.

We've attached a list of 88 GREAT QUESTIONS to get you started. Feel free to add your own. Enjoy your conversations and thanks for your investment into the relationship with your kids.
